Introduction

This is a table of 100 locations for use with Ironsworn, the fabulous RPG by Tomkin Press available for free at <https://www.ironswornrpg.com/>. They can also be used for Viking-themed games.

Just as with NPCs, coming up with locations and waypoints isn't easy. Some players/referees have an easier time but things often grind to a halt as I try to come up with an interesting location. This is meant to be more detailed than the tables on pages 176-177 in the Ironsworn RPG book.

This is a guide. You may, of course, modify the locations as you wish.

There are references in the text to the likelihood of certain incidents. Even occurrences are 50-50. Unlikely are 25% likely to occur. Likely has a 75% chance of occurring. Some entries in the main section may prompt you to refer to further entries, such as ##a.

These are in Appendix A.

Thanks to Shawn Tomkin for creating an excellent product. I have enjoyed my adventures in the Ironsworn world.

Many of these locations were inspired by the excellent website Atlas Obscura.

Regards,

Main table

Roll a 1d100 and consult the entry below.

1. A tree that is thriving, no matter the season. If you spend time studying it and get a hit on a spirit roll, read 1a.
2. The weathered remains of a statue belonging to a forgotten deity or a ruler. It could be 1-2; The head, 3-4; The hand, 5-6; The foot.
3. A rag well with a tree with strips of cloth hanging on it. The well here is said to help cure pains and ailments. Villagers would come here with cloth or linen, soak it in the well water and place it on the affected body part. They would then hang the cloth on a nearby tree, which is adorned with the cloth from the villagers.
4. A beaver dam or the remains of one. Some metal glitters amongst the twigs used to construct the dam.
5. A cairn dedicated to an animal. Roll a 1d6 for the animal. 1: A mammoth 2: a dog 3: a wyvern 4: an eagle 5: a seal 6: a cat
6. A temple built of driftwood. Within it, you can hear the sounds of the sea and even the call of gulls.
7. The remains of a longship. This might be found even inland.
8. A bubbling spring. If there are settlements nearby it might be used by locals.
9. A dolmen is overgrown with moss. It might hold secrets about your quest or vow.
10. A perfectly reflective pool of water. If you encounter it at night and peer into it, read 10a.
11. A rock formation resembling an archway.
12. The remains of a dried river bed. The earth here is cracked and stones carved with weathered symbols lie about.
13. Interlocking columns of rock. They look unstable and pebbles drop from them.
14. A wave-like formation of rock.
15. The remnants of a longhouse that can provide shelter. If you reside for the night, read 15a.
16. The skull of a great dragon. It is large enough to fit a wagon within. The plant growing here is different from that in the area.
17. The skulls of three giants arranged evenly apart. There is a space for a gem on the forehead of the central skull.
18. A small abandoned hut. There might be items left behind; you may attempt a resupply with a +1 to the roll.
19. A deep pit filled with burned bones. You suspect some of the bones might be human.
20. An arrangement of flute-like stones that emit a musical harmony when the wind blows through them.
21. A wooden sign indicating locations nearby, including a sign pointing downwards. There are warnings on some of them.
22. A small cave with lots of crude graffiti insulting minor gods and famous individuals. There is an even chance that they refer to someone you are acquainted with.
23. An orchard of apple trees, with fallen fruit on the ground. If there are villagers nearby, they believe that the fruit is for earth spirits or the gods and not for human consumption.

24. The mummified bodies of 1d6 men, still in their battle attire. If there is a settlement nearby, they might be from there.
25. A gibbet or wooden cage with the skeleton of a man inside. Crows flutter around, picking off the last of the meat.
26. A fallen tree that has not rotted. Birds and small lizards dart about.
27. A pond where villagers throw their marriage tokens after they desire to separate from their lover.
28. An elm tree with a hollow where a human skeleton sits.
29. A giant sword with the hilt and one-third of the blade jutting out from the ground; 3d6x10 feet tall. It is said a giant thrust it here and when the end times come it will be wielded by the last of the giants.
30. A tree with flowering silvery blossoms. If there is a settlement nearby townsfolk come here to make tokens and tie them around the branches hoping to unite with their lover.
31. A spot of earth on which nothing grows. If the location is desolate or barren, this spot is instead fertile.
32. A tiered pyramid of 1d6 tiers. The symbols on it depict a battle between bears and wolves. At the top of the pyramid is the statue of the victor.
33. A set of 1d6 giant boulders with markings in a forgotten language.
34. A grove of trees with branches that twist in unexpected directions. Villagers call these the dancing trees.
35. A crater lake. The water here glows with different colours. There is a terrible sour scent in the area and the plants growing here appear to glow.
36. Graveyard of spears. A shallow pit has been dug here and old spears have been tossed within. The spears are rotted but some of the spearheads are still usable.
37. Graveyard of mammoths. There is a pile of mammoth bones here, and carrion birds feed on the carcass of a recently deceased specimen.
38. The seat of the Moot. A circular arrangement of stones that are just the right height to sit on, with a larger stone in the middle carved with the features of a god of justice or a symbol of it. This is used by nearby settlements to meet and discuss territorial issues. No weapons are to be brought in the circle of stones.
39. The stall of a shop vendor, now abandoned. There remains an item left behind by the vendor. Roll 1d6: 1: a whittled piece of wood in the shape of an otter 2: an acorn 3: a rock with coppery veins 4: a sea shell 5: a wooden bowl 6: rotting meat
40. A dining tent. The smell of cooked food wafts from here but it is curiously unmanned. There is no food within.
41. A quarry of red stone. Villagers use the stone for their houses. Offerings are left whenever they take any stone from here.
42. Eternal flame. A hill with mysterious flames sprouting from the ground that do not extinguish. The flames are easily avoided.
43. Watch tower. A lone tower that is still intact. Climbing to the top presents a view of the area. Read 43a if you do ascend.
44. A geyser that screeches when water spouts from it. The water is scalding hot.
45. An iron pillar that is rusted and broken. There is no salvageable metal left on this pillar.
46. A well-carved statue of a child that is unblemished. Someone has placed linen clothes on it.

47. A Battle Circle is etched in the ground here. There are runes indicating that if one fights within the ring, one of the combatants must die. If you hang around long enough, someone will come here to challenge you to a battle. Read 47a if so.
48. A stone outcropping that is overgrown with wasp nests.
49. A cedar tree with crystal-like veins running through it. They sparkle when sunlight strikes them.
50. A throne made of rock covered with runes. It overlooks a picturesque area.
51. A series of purple shrubs with purplish-black berries.
52. A stone with a carving that resembles you or a party member.
53. A cave with a small opening that you can just squeeze through where you hear whispers. Should you enter, read 53a.
54. An oak tree with arrowheads embedded in it. It looks like it has been used for target practice. Taking the arrowheads will take some time.
55. A still-intact tower with a brazier on the open roof. It appears to be a signal fire or some sort.
56. A Moulin or ice funnel. It is mesmerising as you watch the water flow down. You feel a sense of well-being. Gain +1 momentum.
57. A pool of muddy water. Should you try to inspect it, read 57a.
58. A now dead oak tree that has been struck by lightning. If you perform rituals, the branches of the tree can be used to make a staff or wand of power.
59. A fallen tree the length of a longhouse. Various rats of unusual size dart about chipping on the wood and making their home here.
60. A series of cairns. The engravings mark them as the graves of those defeated in The Battle for Wyndra's Hand.
61. A large stone block marked with runes. It relates the saga of seven members of a tribe, with each falling at each stage. The ending of the saga, where the remaining villager confronts a poisonous wyrm, is unfortunately cut off.
62. A cistern which still retains some (oily-looking) water.
63. A raised mound of earth. The wind blows strongly around here.
64. A grove of trees where all the tree trunks have growths that resemble lumpy human faces.
65. A stone warning of battles against the Sidhe. There is a vein of iron on the stone, though only enough to craft a spearhead.
66. A table that appears to have been used for a feast. Fish bones, dried gravy and empty bottles that reek of wine have been left on it.
67. An overgrown section of a wall about 10m (30' high) and 25m (75') across.
68. High stone pillars about 20m (60)' high. There are bird's nests on top of each pillar.
69. A shrine with markings in an unknown language. Birds periodically make offerings in front of it; dropping seeds, worms and smaller birds here.
70. A cave whose walls are carved with spear-fighting instructions. The drawings are years old.
71. A living bridge made of plants and vines. It is in bad condition currently and might not be able to hold heavy weight.
72. A tree with 1d6 long-haired goats on the branches.
73. A stream of glistening water. If you spend time studying it, read 73a.
74. A field of yellow-red potato leaves. If you dig underneath, read 74a.
75. A cave opening shaped like a bear's mouth. If you enter, ready 75a.

76. An abandoned building that appears to have been an observatory of some sort. There are indications that the inhabitants here studied the stars.
77. A lake with crystalline fish swimming within. They are inedible but might be worth something, particularly alive.
78. A tree in which squirrels have stored lots of acorns. The trunk of the tree is practically filled with them. If you take any, read 78a.
79. A tomb that appears to have been raided. Various belongings are scattered outside. If you spend time returning them to the tomb, read 79a.
80. A huge circular jug large enough for a man to fit in. There is an even chance of something being inside if you investigate. If you do, roll a 1d6 and read 80a.
81. An abandoned house on stilts that appears on the verge of collapse.
82. The remains of a giant bear. The rib bones have been broken off. It is unlikely that a single bear cub is roaming the area.
83. A kiln made of stone. Some clay pots are still inside. There is an even chance of one of them giving you information about the area and giving you the equivalent of a secure an advantage roll.
84. A cabin in the woods. This looks like it was recently occupied. If you can read and spend time studying the materials here, read 84a.
85. A mound where there are several pots of fermenting food, including fish. The smell is pungent and off-putting. Whoever left them here is not present, though if you remain here it is likely you will encounter them.
86. A butte of rock. There are runes indicating this is the All-hearing stone. Climbing on top requires a strong hit on a Strength test. If you do so, read 86a.
87. A cliff which sticks out; markings indicate it is named the troll's tongue. Anyone who remains here under a full moon is said to be swallowed by the tongue.
88. A clearing with the shattered remains of weapons. If you stay here for the night, read 88a.
89. A pillar of rock. At its base is a human skeleton that looks as though it has been pinned by the rock.
90. A burial mound. The statues of two soldiers have been placed outside the entrance. They face different directions.
91. A pool or lake of smoking lava. The air is sulphurous. You see figures from your past in the haze, mocking you and your journey.
92. A dolmen with runes indicating the hall of the Vowbreaker. You may break your vow here without penalty.
93. A small shrine dedicated to forest spirits or the God of herbs. Studying the markings for a period of time will allow you to pick up the Herbalist Asset or pick an additional ability from it for 1 less XP.
94. A bubbling pool of mud. Should you lie in it, read 94a.
95. An abandoned reservoir that seems to have dried up. You see huge footprints left by a creature. Should you remain here, read 95a.
96. A cliffside where birds (terns/finches or hawks) have made their nests and laid their eggs. Climbing the cliff and harvesting the eggs is a Dangerous task, allowing you to resupply.
97. A gigantic nest with two large pink-speckled eggs within. The eggs are the size of chests and difficult to carry around.
98. An abandoned fort with the remnants of a wrecked palisade. Most of it lies in ruins.

99. A tree with gold branches and leaves. The branches are quite fragile and break easily. The silver turns to rust when removed from the tree.
100. A gigantic horn stands here, propped up by a wooden scaffold. It looks ready to be blown. If you do so, read 100a.

Appendix A

1a. This tree is grown from the seed of the First Tree or another ancient, fabled specimen. Obtaining a fruit or a seed from it might have beneficial qualities or be a good gift for a tribe or a spiritual individual.

10a. You find elfin faces looking back. It is likely that they will react to you.

15a. You dream of the previous occupants of the house. They bear implements made of an unknown wood and are dressed in thick, brown furs.

43a. Within the tower are a bunch of papers and tools for measuring distance. You also get a good view of the area. Make your next Undertake a Journey roll at +1.

47a. Roll a 1d6 for the challenger. 1: Garn, a fresh faced youth with a pitchfork he claims is a trident. 2: Nyndor, a bored mercenary. 3: Byangr, wields a war hammer. He claims to have slain three others in the circle already. If you fight him, he will talk about the blows he inflicted on the others he has fought. 4: Erik, wields a war spear. He believes in the divine nature of battle and that the Gods look on when you fight here. 5: Syndara, wields a sword. She is agile and nicks you in combat. 6: Wynder, wields a staff. She chants and hurls tiny curses during the fight.

If you survived the battle and did not kill your opponent, you suffer ill-luck for three days. You make rolls as though you are debilitated.

53a. You hear insults when you are inside here. The voice is high-pitched and continuous. You are very unlikely to be able to find the source of the insults, however.

56a. The runes read "Beware the dreaming tree. Lie here and you will be captured by the realm of dreams."

57a. A large eel sticks out its head and tries to bite you. Make a defensive roll against Edge. Should you miss, take 1 harm as it nips you. Fighting the eel is difficult as it retreats back into its hiding spot.

73a. The stream has tiny glittering fish.

74a. The potatoes here are exceptionally large, with some being as large as a man.

75a. This is surprisingly cozy. You may rest and resupply here without fear of being disturbed for one night.

78a. You keep having acorns being flung at you. Do a Face Danger roll as though you are being attacked by a troublesome foe.

79a. You feel a sense of goodwill coursing through you. Make your next Secure an Advantage roll with a +1.

80a. 1-2: A nest for fleeing eagles, 3-4: prayer beads made of various materials, including an iron bead, 5-6: A foul treacly liquid

84a. The owner of this place appears to be an expert of wyvern hunting. You pay 1 less xp to acquire a Young Wyvern or obtaining a skill for one.

86a. On top of the butte you have a clear view of the surrounding area. You are able to hear sounds that you believe are within ten miles.

88a. A ghostly army of warriors marches forth towards the north. They do not acknowledge you.

94a. You feel a sense of well being. Heal 1 health or get +1 momentum.

95a. A creature the size of a dire wolf comes here to drink. You hear ghostly voices around it, telling it to guard the reservoir. Should you confront it, it is a Dangerous foe; besides attacking with its bite you feel yourself punched and grabbed by ghostly hands.

100a. A giant emerges and asks you why it has been summoned. It asks you if it is the end days. If you reply no, he goes back to sleep. If you reply yes, he lifts a club and tries to smash you. The giant is an extreme foe.
